On Feb. 14, the funeral took place of the Rev. John McGivern, the beloved and widely lamented curate of Banbridge, the burial ground at Annacorney. The Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Neill, bishop of Dromore, presided at the office and high mass.

The Very Rev. Matthew Lynch, V. C., rector of Kilscrewduff, Rostrevor, died on Feb. 2, aged 62, to the sorrow of the entire county. He was ordained in 1885, and was educated at St. Columba's college, Newry, and at the University of Salamanca, Spain.

Dublin.

One of the best known of the missionary staff of the Jesuit Fathers, Upper Gardiner street, Dublin, has passed away in the person of Rev. William Butler, S. J., whose death occurred on Feb. 2. Father Butler was well known all over Ireland, having conducted missions and retreats in nearly all the important centers in the country. He was a powerful pulpit orator, and as a musician had an enviable reputation.

Kildare.

An old resident of the district of Athy passed away on Feb. 4 in the person of Mr. William Manders, Cardin. He was a devout Catholic, and on the occasion of the collection made some time since in aid of the funds for the restoration and renovation of St. Michael's, Athy, he gave a subscription of £10. The remains of deceased were interred in St. Michael's, Athy, on Feb. 6, after office and high mass in St. Michael's, Athy.

Meath.

The Rev. John J. Kelly, a native of County Kildare, died at Southampton, Eng., on Feb. 5. He was the brother of Mr. Francis J. Kelly, a highly respected citizen of Trim, and one of its leading merchants, and also of Mrs. Gogarty, wife of Mr. John Gogarty, another esteemed citizen of the town. Father Kelly was well known in Trim, and the news of his death at a comparatively early age has been heard there with much regret, and great sympathy is felt for his relatives in their bereavement.

Noted Priest Dead.

From the Irish Dominican Convent of San Clemente, in Rome, comes word of the death of a remarkable but little known personage, Father Costello, at the fine old age of 82. It may be safely said, writes the Rome correspondent of the London Catholic Weekly, that few men of the century whose boundary we have just crossed have done work more valuable or of more lasting and important consequences. This will look like thoughtless hyperbole to almost every one who reads it. And nothing more natural, because few have ever heard his name, and those in Ireland who knew him once have either preceded him to the grave or have long since forgotten him. In Rome he was not known to many; the ordinary visitor never met him. Yet he has been a remarkable figure. He was well known in the Vatican library in the Lateran; he knew the Barbarini archives and those of Propaganda, as well as a man knows the contents of the drawers of his writing desk. He was attached to some convents of his order in Ireland during the first years of his priesthood, but he was transferred to the Irish house of the order in Rome about half a century ago, and has been attached to it ever since. In early life he suffered from deafness, which practically incapacitated him for mission work. But he was not the man to waste his life bemoaning his misfortune. With his buoyant nature, he thought within himself that he had other faculties left which he could use, and he has used them perseveringly day by day for the last fifty years. He has ransacked the archives and libraries in Rome, public and private, and has copied out almost every document bearing on the relations of the Irish church with the Holy See down to the time of the Reformation. The labor and patience which that means cannot be realized unless by one who has ever tried to decipher one of these medieval documents. But use makes master. Father Costello, with the patience of an Irish monk of old time and the plodding of a modern German, wrestled with the work until he got used to the characters, and then those who became to him as the letter of yesterday's post.

Hardly a day found him absent from his chair at one of the archives or libraries, deciphering, copying and verifying, and during the long span he has filled up an enormous heap of manuscript material for Irish history, ecclesiastical and civil, every page neatly and carefully written. Thus has this good man, with his silent and hidden life, left a legacy to the Convent of San Clemente and to his native land that is beyond all price. Ireland badly wants an ecclesiastical history, for it has none. Curiously enough, the only one worthy the name is by a German—Canon Bellenheim of Aix-la-Chapelle—compiled at the instance and with the help of Cardinal Moran. But that is in German, and, of course, has some drawbacks. But it will be impossible to produce a complete history without the hitherto undiscovered materials which the painstaking priest who has just passed away has stored up for the sake of faith and fatherhood.—Leader.

Fine Weather in Ireland.

Reports from Ireland state that this has been, so far, one of the finest winters that ever passed over that country. There has hardly been a wet day during the two months that have passed over since the first of December. There has hardly been any frost and only a slight sprinkle of snow. In fact, there has been in Dublin no snow or frost worth speaking of since 1885. The weather has been very different not only on the continent of Europe, but in England. Trains have been snowed out this winter in many places in England and Scotland, and the cold was intense. But on the continent of Europe the weather has been and is still fearfully cold. People have been frozen to death in the streets of Berlin and Vienna, and France has suffered from the cold down to the shores of the Mediterranean.

Funeral of T. B. Healy, M. C. C.

Yesterday morning at half-past 11 o'clock the remains of Mr. T. B. Healy, M. C. C., were taken from St. Peter and Paul's church, Cork, and conveyed for interment to Donoughmore. During the many years Mr. Healy had been in public life he had always discharged with seal and marked ability the varied duties which fell to him at the several boards of which he was a member. In this way he had made a large circle of friends, who sincerely regretted his demise, and the great majority of whom attended today to pay the last tribute of respect to his memory. Of the deceased gentleman it may be said in a sentence that he possessed all those qualities which go to make fast and sincere friends, while to his public duties he brought to bear a high degree of intelligence which his long experience had matured. On all occasions his sentiments and feelings were in accord with the best aspirations of the people. In many instances might be given of the faith that was in him in this respect. Laid to rest at a comparatively early age, he is regretted by his friends and mourned by a wife and children to whom he was a good husband and a fond father, and who, in their bereavement, have the heartfelt sympathy of all who were acquainted with the deceased gentleman. A wreath placed on the grave by "A few laborers of Donoughmore," "the poor man's friend," "the poor man's ally," spoke with pathetic eloquence of the manner in which he was regarded by the lowly agricultural laborers, on whose behalf his best efforts were exerted. At the hour the funeral was held to start a large number of people had assembled outside the church, and by the time the cortege got under way a long stream of carriages, carts and traps were in order. The general public present not only represented his native district, but also other portions of the county as well as the city.

Among those present were: The Right Hon. Lord Mayor Barrett, Messrs. A. Roche, M. P.; D. D. Shreehan, P. Crean, M. P.; J. C. Flynn, M. P.; Sir John Scott, David M. Barry, Donald Barry, M. Ryan, P. Kelly, P. Dwyer, Michael O'Keefe, David Barry. Wreaths were sent, among others, by "His sorrowing wife and family," the Donoughmore United Irish League, the Donoughmore Land and Labor association, the attendants Cork district lunatic asylum, and by "A few laborers of Donoughmore" to "the poor man's friend."—Cork Examiner, Dec. 27, 1906.

They Want St. Patrick.

The Catholic Universe of Cleveland tells of a minister out in Toledo who has declared that St. Patrick is a member of his particular "branch" of the Catholic church, and, to emphasize that assertion and to prove that he is not merely talking to kill time, he announced a full service for his church on St. Patrick's day. "Too long," says the minister, "have we allowed the Roman Catholic church to monopolize St. Patrick." And he adds that the movement among Protestants to hold services on St. Patrick's day will be a general one in Toledo. "I believe," says the minister, "all the Episcopal, as well as the other churches in the city, will have services on this day."

And Now for the "Stage Jew."

Mr. Maurice Westenthal in the Independent comments the Irish on having systematically driven the so-called comedians from aspersing the Irish character on the stage. He calls on the Jews to go and do likewise. He is right in his contention, and we hope that his advice will be followed. There are some unprincipled Irish and Jewish comedians who would sell their people and their characters for the proceeds of the box office. Let the box office learn that it does not pay, and then there will be a halt.—Catholic Universe.
